Sometime during the shooting of the landmark The Birth of a Nation, filmmaker D.W. Griffith probably wondered how he could top himself. In 1916, he showed how, with the awesome Intolerance. The film began humbly enough as a medium-budget feature entitled The Mother and the Law, wherein the lives of a poor but happily married couple are disrupted by the misguided interference of a "social reform ...

Intolerance (1916) - D.W. Griffith | Synopsis

society, D. W. Griffith fought a battle within himself that pitted his vision, his talents and his nagging doubts against each other to produce one of the greatest movie phenomena of all time: "Intolerance." He released it in 1916 and struggled with its financial burden and its disappointing popular reception for the remainder of his career.
